Analyst's take

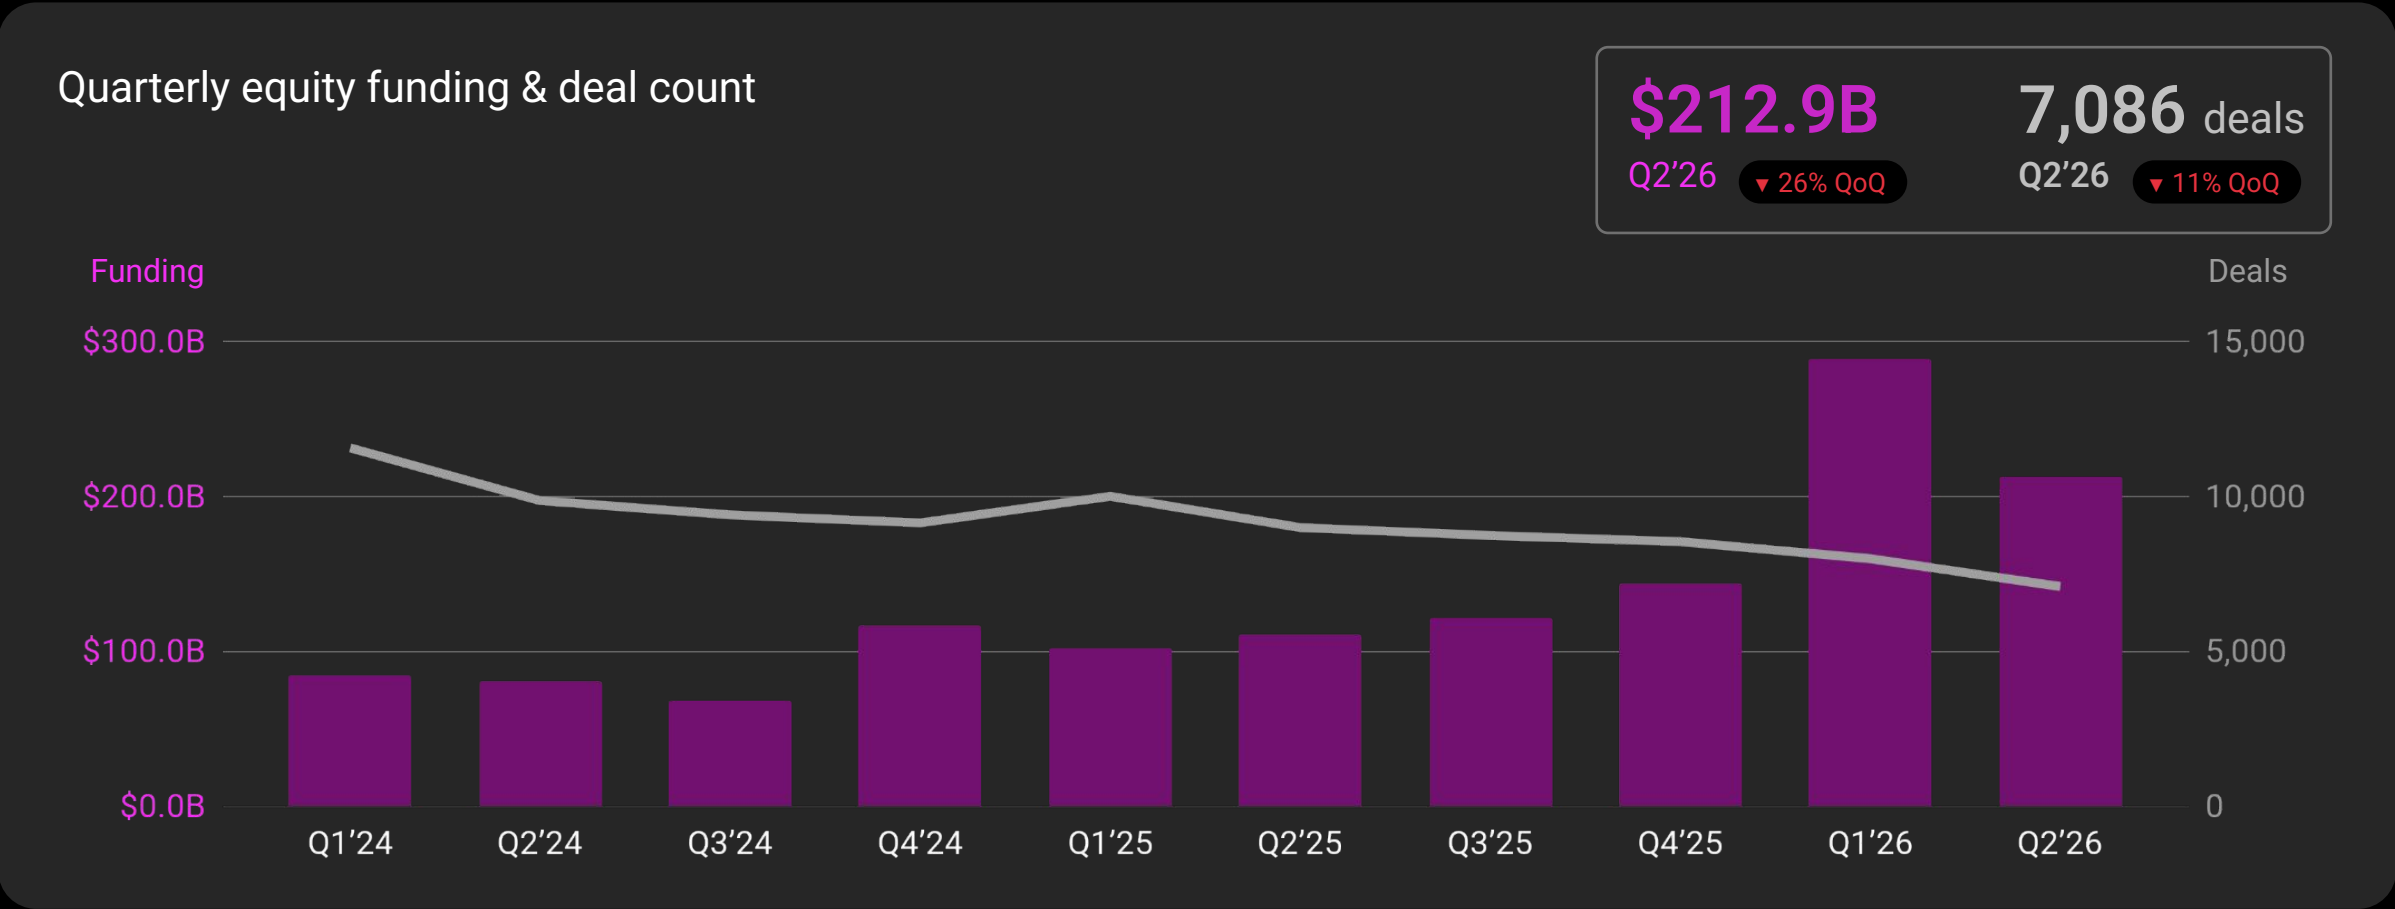

For the second straight quarter, one or two companies carried the headline funding number. OpenAI and Anthropic in Q1. Anthropic again in Q2. That makes total funding a weak proxy for the broader market, where deal activity and exits moved in the other direction. Record funding and a narrowing market are experienced very differently depending on where you sit.

Near-record funding masks a much weaker market

Deal activity has fallen for more than a year, but blockbuster AI financings continue to keep quarterly funding totals near record highs.

Humanoid robots lead a tight pack of AI markets on deal count

Leading AI markets were separated by just a handful of deals for the quarter, while Anthropic's massive raise drove funding totals in several of these top categories.

Analyst's take

Physical AI is enabling new robot capabilities that were not possible a couple years ago, propelling industrial humanoids and robot foundation models to lead deal count. Deals alone obscure the picture though. Anthropic raised a massive round, pushing five markets past $65B, a reminder that deal count is a cleaner read on market activity than funding totals this quarter.
